STYLE SPY

STATIONERY

MRS. JOHN L. STRONG
A third-generation Mrs. John L. Strong bride, following in the footsteps of her mother and grandmother, requested a classic style—intertwined initials hand-engraved by the Madison Avenue stationer—to carry on the family legacy.

ALEXA PULTIZER
Calligraphy script on scarlet paper pleased both the wedding couple and their traditional Southern parents. Hand-drawn animals lent save-the-date cards a playful theatricality.

PAPER TRAIL

Our favorite stationers share some of the stories that inspired their most memorable designs.

CARTIER
The jewelry company has a long history of floral-themed designs. Its newest orchid motif is light and airy, but the intricate details make it appropriate for an invitation to an elegant garden ceremony.

DEMPSEY & CARROLL
Inspired by the reception location, Washington, DC's Anderson House, the couple included both the building's exterior and a laurel motif found in the halls on their invitations, which were printed on thick ecru stock.

THORNWILLOW
This whimsical invitation, based on love notes with stick-figure drawings that the couple had exchanged with each other, was created in lime-green ink by Thornwillow founder Luke Ives Pontifell.
